

The English Department at the University of Georgia announces a search for a Lecturer in Rhetoric and Composition to begin in August 2022. The successful candidate will teach First-year Writing and, depending on curricular need, may be assigned upper-division writing courses. The teaching load is 4/4. This is a non-tenure-track position, renewable on a yearly basis depending on satisfactory performance and the availability of funding. Lecturers may be promoted to Senior Lecturer after five years of service. We welcome candidates who may employ interdisciplinary approaches that may transcend traditional boundaries for the best teaching delivery. Lecturers are not expected to conduct research and have limited service obligations.

Minimal credentials are a Ph.D. in Rhetoric and Composition, and a minimum of two years of experience teaching writing; or a Ph.D. in English with academic coursework in rhetoric, composition theory and pedagogy, or professional writing, and a minimum of two years of experience teaching writing. We particularly welcome candidates with expertise in and ability to teach in one or more of the following secondary areas: digital writing and rhetoric; professional and technical communication; multimodal composition; new media; writing analytics; and multilingual writing.

Additional information and applications may be filed online at <https://www.ugajobsearch.com/postings/229507>. Qualified candidates should submit the following materials: a letter of application, a curriculum vitae, names and email address of three references, and a Teaching Portfolio. Review of materials will begin on December 20, 2021, and all complete applications submitted by this date will receive full consideration. The Search Committee Chair is Nate Kreuter, who can be reached at kreuter@uga.edu.
